How to Improve Photoshop/Elements 1. Learn about the tools The software gives you a cheat sheet of every tool in the program. When you're first learning to use it, it's helpful to understand how each tool works in terms of the color they change, the tool options, and what layer effects work best. Below are the tutorials on those topics. 2. Practice with simple projects It's a good idea to practice creating and editing an image and then applying layer effects. It doesn't have to be something that can't be changed and won't cost money. A good practice is to create a photo of a friend or family member. There are a few different ways to get started. Make it for a kid or pet. Create a collage of family photos. Or just do something unique that you enjoy. 3. Get the basics of PS/Elements It's good to spend a lot of time learning the tool. Start by learning the different tools and an overview of the menus and icons. Read the tutorials on the Photoshop/Elements page. When you get a feel for it, start doing some minor modifications to your favorite images. Check the examples of what is done and then try it for yourself. 4. Learn about layers Layers allow you to build an image while keeping the changes intact. If you apply an adjustment, modify the photo and then want to undo the effects, you can simply go back to the layer and apply a different adjustment or effect. 5. Use basic editing techniques

Some Photoshop/Elements skills involve the software's editing functions. Basic Functions

The most useful advanced feature in Photoshop/Elements is the ability to take a selection and create a duplicate layer. This can be used to copy an area of the image to a layer, then modify the selection and the new layer at the same time. Advanced functions

The iPhone 5 Back Case With Adapter Does the Right Thing When The iPhone 5 was announced, one of the major features was Touch ID, that fingerprint recognition of the iPhone's home button. One of the problems with this new feature is that the home button and fingerprint scanner are located at a pretty crucial part of the phone – the corners. This makes for a pretty inconvenient way to unlock your phone, but the custom iPhone 5 back case solves that problem with this ingenious adapter. The back case for iPhone 5 starts out looking like any other iPhone 5 case. The case itself is thin and white, and has a round cut-out for access to the phone's camera. Once the back is detached, it reveals the home button and fingerprint scanner tucked into one corner of the back. The curved piece of plastic that covers the back button and scanner is removable, and slips away from the case, leaving the Home button behind to be clicked on with a pressure sensitive point. You can't use the back case itself to unlock the phone, but the pressure sensitive Home button has a range of 10mm on either side of the centre, allowing you to be pretty confident in being able to unlock the phone with ease. The iPhone 5 back case is a pretty handy accessory for those looking for a unique way to keep their iPhone 5 protected. The ease of pairing the back case with the iPhone 5 is also handy when having an iPhone 5 screen protector, as it means you don't have to pull out your iPhone to be able to access the Home button. The iPhone 5 back case is available from Citizen Eco-Drive for about $30, but you can save yourself some cash by picking up the back case with the iPhone 5 adapter for about $15. I found a $25 smartphone charger (Cheapest I found) on Amazon.com and then a price of $5.00. For the price of a case, I got a full charger that works with any smartphone or tablet. The iPhone 5 back case with adapter, while slick, still, for some reason, adds the concept of a smartphone case. I don't know why, but I don't need to carry any extra electronics other than my smartphone. I guess at the end of the day there's no need to carry a charger, and a case that can only be used with a particular smartphone will only go in your backpack, but, still it is Pediatric asthma in Cali, Colombia: multiple-factorial risk profile. Asthma has become more prevalent among children and its prevalence has increased during the last decades, especially in developing countries. The study aimed to determine the risk factors of childhood asthma in Cali, Colombia, a multiethnic city. A cross-sectional survey was conducted during 1998-1999. The sample consisted of 594 children from 2 to 18 years old from a random multistage cluster (with the probability proportional to size method) of the Cali zip code system. Data were collected through an anonymous, self-administered questionnaire. The occurrence of asthma was determined by defining the presence of the following variables: 1) previous doctor diagnosis of asthma; 2) wheezing, runny nose, or breathing problems lasting more than 1 week in the previous 12 months; 3) sleep disturbance because of wheezing, breathing problems, or coughing in the previous 12 months; and 4) waking up at night because of wheezing, breathing problems, or coughing. The variables evaluated as risk factors were the following: 1) history of smoking during pregnancy, low birth weight, family history of asthma, cat and dog ownership, exposure to household tobacco smoke, and socioeconomic class; 2) history of airway disease of the mother, low socioeconomic status, low parental education level, poor ventilation, fireplace use, pets (dog, cat, or bird) ownership, and parental crowding. Risks for asthma were assessed, and odds ratios and their 95% confidence intervals were estimated through a logistic regression model. The prevalence of asthma was 23.4%. The risk factors independently associated with asthma were 1) the presence of a mother with asthma (adjusted odds ratio [OR]: 2.6, 95% confidence interval [CI]: 1.5-4.3), 2) low socioeconomic status (adjusted OR: 1.7, 95% CI: 1.0-2.8), 3) exposure to household tobacco smoke (adjusted OR: 1.4, 95% CI: 0.9-2.2), 4) pets ownership (adjusted OR: 1.5, 95% CI:

0.9-2.4), and 5) history of maternal bronchial asthma (adjusted OR: 1.7, 95% CI: 1.0-2.8). The prevalence of asthma in Cali is similar to the reported prevalence in other developing countries. The following multiple-factorial risk profile was found: having a mother
