The process of shared decision-making between patient and doctor could be useful for decisions about participation in clinical trials. Little is known about the construct validity of existing measures to assess shared decision-making. The aim was to develop a reliable and valid measurement of shared decision-making. Design/Methodology/approach: We developed a novel self-report questionnaire based on the principles of shared decision-making. First, qualitative data collection techniques were used to develop items and subsequent analysis of the literature. Second, face validity was established in a small sample of patient-physicians. Third, the reliability and construct validity of this measure was established in a larger sample of patient-physicians. Fourth, test-retest reliability was also established for an established measure of shared decision-making. The questionnaire covers five domains: (1) accuracy of information, (2) understanding of information, (3) involvement in decision-making, (4) confidence in the decision-making process, and (5) preference for information sharing. This questionnaire and study shows that shared decision-making can be measured in a reliable and valid way, with both quantitative and qualitative methods. It has good face and content validity and good construct validity.Q: How to write a custom validator for C#? This is my first post. I need help in writing a custom validator for an object in a CLR. For example, I have a custom class: using System; using System.Collections.Generic; using System.Linq; using System.Text; using System.Threading.Tasks; namespace ConsoleApp7 { class MyClass { public int ID { get; set; } public string Text { get; set; } } } I have an instance of this in the program: MyClass s = new MyClass(); s.ID = 1; s.Text = "Some text"; I need to write a custom validator that would check if the text is only numbers and letters and the length of the text doesn't exceed a limit. Note that I need to check the custom object's properties.
