Uterine and placental blood flows were measured by the microsphere technique in nonlaboring, nonacidotic, singleton, growth retarded fetuses and compared to those of the appropriate controls. The growth retarded fetuses (n = 19) had a significantly lower weight (1,468 +/- 353 g versus 2,552 +/- 765 g, P less than 0.01), and blood flow to the uterus (95 +/- 46 ml/min versus 134 +/- 38 ml/min, P less than 0.01), and placental bed (71 +/- 34 ml/min versus 110 +/- 41 ml/min, P less than 0.01) compared to controls. A subgroup of growth retarded fetuses had brain sparing; in these fetuses uterine and placental blood flow were similar to controls. Thus, despite some placental hypoperfusion, there was a markedly decreased maternal blood flow to the growth retarded fetus in vivo. This appears to be related to the state of placental dysfunction. In addition, the presence of brain sparing growth retarded fetuses is not explained by an increased blood flow to the brain.The in vitro effects of dantrolene on the mechanism of action of oxotremorine and physostigmine in the isolated guinea-pig ileum. The effects of dantrolene and hyoscine in various combinations on the contractile responses to oxotremorine and physostigmine were studied on the guinea-pig isolated ileum. 1 and 10 microM oxotremorine and 10 microM physostigmine produced a tetrodotoxin-sensitive contraction on the ileum and evoked an increased inhibitory junction potential (IJP). The IJP was not inhibited by the anticholinesterase, physostigmine, even at a concentration of 10 microM, and the contractions to oxotremorine and physostigmine were not suppressed by hyoscine. Dantrolene at a concentration of 50 nM (equivalent to 12.5 microM) completely prevented the contractions to oxotremorine and physostigmine. The contractions to oxotremorine (1 595f342e71
